Add words	The people's health is a nation's greatest asset, but there is still a gap of 25 years in life expectancy between the richest and poorest areas of England, leading to shameful health inequalities. Labour strongly endorses the WHO definition of health "as a state of complete physical, mental and social well being and not merely the absence of disease". For all its strengths the NHS was not designed to fully achieve this because 60% of a person's health is determined by factors beyond the influence of the NHS. Future policy on health requires coordinated action across all areas of government policy and against the worst excesses of the tobacco, food and drinks industries. Labour will bring in the necessary legislation to reflect these requirements. This will underpin our strategy for health and care services in future.

Add words	"Labour's Vision Labour's vision for our NHS is to bring together physical health, mental health and social care into a single service. Labour's Actions Labour will protect the NHS by repealing the Health and Social Care Act 2012 and will stop further wasteful privatisation in the NHS. We will also review the PFI financing deals made to build the new NHS facilities; this actions should reduce the current and future huge debts which are affecting the quality of NHS services."

Add words	The present Government has underfunded Hospitals, GP services and social care services alike. Labour therefore recognises that, if a decent overall service is to be provided, a Labour Government will need to significantly increase real-terms funding for front line services in each of these vital areas and Labour reaffirms its commitment to work with health unions and other NHS supporters to prevent privatisation.

Add words	GPs should no longer be distracted by the running of Clinical Commissioning Groups and serving patients coupled to improved patient access and outputs should be target driven. CCG?s and GP practices will receive sanctions for high levels of non-GP registered people in the community and higher sanctions if non-registered people fall within vulnerable groups where deprivation levels are within the top centiles. A moratorium on Walk in Centre closures will become immediately affective and a comprehensive review of Walk in Centres will follow; simply to state that Walk in Centres that are not GP led was a rationale for closure will not be considered acceptable.

Add words	Labour will halt NHS privatisation and reverse it where it has gone too far already. Labour will take all steps in its power to ensure England has a comprehensive NHS provided on the basis of social solidarity, not one run for private profit. Labour will review and remove any legal or other barriers which may restrict our collective right to a publicly owned, publicly accountable, publicly provided comprehensive NHS, including direct barriers and those which expose the NHS to international competition and trade laws and treaties. The 2012 Act abolished the Secretary of State's duty to provide and secure a comprehensive health service across England. This has enabled a shift towards a two-tier NHS, which looks much like a state-subsidised insurance-based model. Combined with funding cuts and wastefully expensive commercialisation, this is rapidly moving us to a system where only those living in richer areas, or who can pay extra, will get comprehensive care (such as face to face access to GPs and hospital beds) and where the rest of us will increasingly have to make do with only 'core' services (like A&E).

Add words	As a first step, in the first Queen's Speech Labour will pass an NHS Reinstatement Bill. The bill will restore the Secretary of State's duty to secure and provide all reasonable health services throughout England, for everyone. The current shift to a two-tier NHS is dangerous, unfair and inefficient. It must be reversed, and a comprehensive health service reinstated. The bill will also halt the rush to markets by repealing the key commercialising aspects of the 2012 Act and subsequent measures. Including: Scrapping sections 72-80 of the Act, including Section 75 and associated Regulations (which have become known as 'NHS Privatisation Regulations') Abolishing Monitor, noting its key role in enforcing competition in the new 'health care market' and the Francis report recommendation that there should be only one regulator of providers, not two. Scrapping the duty of autonomy on different parts of the NHS. Repealing the abolition of NHS Trusts and the requirement for them all to become Foundation Trusts. Stopping Foundation Trusts from being allowed to withdraw previously mandatory health services re-establishing the limitation of personal health budget direct payments to pilot schemes only, recognising that schemes to date have shown mixed results.

Add words	There is a need to exempt the NHS from the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP) currently under negotiation between the EU and the USA. Labour rejects the concept of applying market principles to the NHS and the routine application of market competition for NHS services. Labour supports the principle of making the NHS a preferred provider – that NHS services should not face the threat of competition and destabilisation –with the NHS working in partnership where appropriate with other sectors, including the voluntary and third sectors. Labour recognises that there is a role for the third sector and independent sector organisations in providing health and care services where they have proven expertise that is not available in the NHS, and where there are gaps in the delivery of high quality services to meet the needs of local people. The third sector often plays a particularly crucial role in providing services through supporting people to live at home, and providing advocacy and rehabilitation services. However, where it is determined that the third or independent sector should provide such services, they should be branded accordingly and not be branded as NHS services. Furthermore there may be a need to renegotiate NHS contracts which have already been let with the third or independent sector where these are not in the best interests of local people or in the interests of the NHS as a whole, where these impede effective collaboration with other NHS services or where they do not represent good value for money. In ending the system of routinely applying market mechanisms to the NHS, we will also give consideration to ways in which GP services can be offered as part of the NHS as an alternative option to GPs offering their services as independent contractors.

Add words One aspect of integration of care is the integration of computerised patient records. One reason for having to repeat one's medical history again and again to a succession of health professionals is that there is no central accessible record of it. Despite previous catastrophic attempts to create such a database, it is important that a Labour government should make another attempt at building such a system. Doing this without the need to ensure that some private company can make a big profit out of it might improve the chances of success.

Add words In 2003 the previous Labour government established Foundation Trust Hospitals in England with the aim of making hospital services more accountable to local communities by giving Trust members a real say over their running. Ten years on the consensus is that, whilst more than 2 million people are members of Foundation Trusts, the model has not achieved its full potential and there is a need to re-awaken the original ambition behind it. One Nation Labour believes in more 'people-powered' public services and so a future Labour Government will consider ways of strengthening the role of members within Foundation Trusts and work to better engage and involve NHS staff in Trust membership.

Add words Labour will ensure that the organisation or reorganisation of health care services (including but not limited to, any change of provider) be founded upon a solid and transparent evidence base and subject to full debate. In particular, whilst care in the community may be desirable for some patients, this should not be seen as an excuse to cut or privatise. The research evidence for moving a lot of services into the community is weak and health service planners should not present all service reorganisations as improving care when they do not. In particular, there is a danger in reducing the number of hospital beds given that hospital beds in England are already lower per head of population than in many other developed countries.

Add words	The new Care Act introduces a duty to promote well-being. That is welcomed, but insufficient - a fair society must declare the standard of well-being to which that promotion aspires. Without it, there is a high risk of minimalism. The standard must become the context for understanding the real needs of individuals. The new national minimum eligibility are a floor below which no-one will fall. But the extent to which people are able to meet needs above the floor will depend on the level of available resource. It may not be possible to increase that level in the foreseeable future. However, in the short term this will allow honesty with older and disabled people about their needs in a way the current system denies, and support greater equity of resource allocation. It will also generate real knowledge about the funding gap. This is an essential first step to agreeing a new consensus on funding.
Notes	Labour will work with key interests to agree the standard of well-being that society should aspire to for older and disabled people. The United Nations approach to the standard of life that disabled people should expect from member nations provides a benchmark.
Notes	A policy forum event was held in 2013 and amendments were developed in consultation with the Parliamentary Candidate Daniel Zeichner and approved by the Executive Committee of Cambridge CLP.

Add words	The new Care Act introduces a duty to promote well-being. That is welcomed, but in itself is not enough. A decent and fair society must declare the standard of well-being to which that promotion aspires. Without it, there is a high risk of minimalism, given a mind-set that has pervaded delivery of social care for many years. The standard must become the context for understanding the real needs of individuals. The new national minimum eligibility criteria are just that – a floor below which no-one will fall. But the extent to which people are able to meet needs above the floor will depend on the level of available resource. It may not be possible to increase that level in the foreseeable future. However, in the short term this approach will allow honesty with older and disabled people about their needs in a way the current system denies, and support greater equity of resource allocation. Add words In order to achieve the above A Labour Government would introduce a National Care Service (NCS) to compliment the National Health Service. This NCS will be properly resourced and publically owned. It will be staffed by highly skilled and well paid workers with a system of national minimum standards. Future consideration will be given to the merger of the NHS and NCS to form a National Care and Health Service.

Add words Given the conflicting public demands for high standards of health and social care and low taxes, governments are entitled to take a strong interventionist approach in promoting healthy living which could save the NHS huge amounts of expenditure and increase the quality of life. A Labour Government would promote further anti-smoking initiatives and take tougher measures against excessive alcohol consumption including plain packaging for tobacco and minimum unit prices for both. Labour would require all schools to serve healthy meals, encourage appropriate physical activities and legislate to prevent corporations from using excessive sugar and salt in the production of their food and beverages. Food fraud is a significant threat to public health and consequently Labour would strengthen the Food Standards Agency and bring together government, industry, regulators and consumers to improve measures to tackle the complex issue of food adulteration. Since air pollution especially in urban areas is estimated to cause 29,000 premature deaths every year, a Labour Government will introduce tougher rules on air pollution by motor vehicles and lorries which would accompany a greener and cleaner transport policy.

Add words The Food Industry is particularly strong in its lobbying of Government at National & European Level to protect its interests. These interests have a significant negative impact on the health of citizens and consequently create demands on the Health Service. The growth of chronic illness such as Type 2 Diabetes serves to illustrate this point. The use of Taxation on fats, salt & sugar would help to address these problems and the resulting revenues raised should be directed at local authority health spending.

Add words The Marmot Review proposed a minimum income for healthy living so that everyone – whether they are in work or on welfare – would receive enough money, vouchers and support to ensure a healthy lifestyle. This was the only recommendation of the Marmot Review that the current Government has not endorsed. Research has shown that the value of out-of-work benefits paid to the unemployed can be important factors in whether unemployment leads to an increased risk of ill health. This means that there is a need to improve the value and accessibility of benefits from a health perspective. This has led to calls for a minimum income for healthy living (MIHL) which will ensure that there is a right to a certain standard of living for those on benefits. A Labour Government will examine how to implement the MIHL.

Add words Britain's mental health is at its worst since 1997 with increasing morbidity and a worsening suicide rate, because of recession and savage cuts to public services which disproportionately affect the most vulnerable. A clear focus on enhanced well-being and the promotion of mental health within schools, workplaces and general hospitals is needed to reduce the economic and social burden of mental ill health. Labour will instruct the Care Quality Commission to make sure that all providers of mental health and social care services comply with the Equalities Act meeting the access needs of disabled people and the cultural needs of the BAME community. In addition, Labour will demand that all relevant authorities play an active part in improving the integration between physical and mental health services and deploy community development resources with the clear objective of strengthening the community and voluntary sector to deliver on our aspiration for better mental health and spiritual well-being for all local populations.
